"White bagging" increasingly disrupting patient care – Five things you can do

While "white bagging" may reduce costs for payers and plan sponsors, it does not always equate to lower cost to the patient. This practice bypasses many safety checks and balances that exist when drugs are procured, prepared, and handled internally within the hospital setting. Evidence is quickly mounting that white bagging leads to waste, delays in patient care and medical errors. This is especially the case with biologics used to treat chronic conditions and with chemotherapy.

Our expert Steve Rough, MS, RPh, FASHP, and Visante SVP, explains more here and also provides five tips on what you can do proactively to address this and other mounting payer site of care strategies.

It's almost here! Summer 340B Coalition Conference
